

Citizen Resolution # 040522

(For Hearing Officer completion)

Black Bear Bait Regulations

Wisconsin's bear baiting rules allow for up to 5.5 months of baiting and unlimited number of bait stations. The long baiting season increases the chances of disease transmission among a myriad of wildlife feeding at these bait stations, increases the chances for bear-hound-wolf conflicts, and bear habituation to foods found among humans at campgrounds and homes. Minnesota and Michigan limit bear baiting to three tended bait stations per registered hunter for two months. Stations may be moved upon submission of a relocation form to the DNR. Wisconsin currently has no baiting registration requirements. Wisconsin wardens have stated they cannot devote time or manpower needed to investigate the number of violations submitted to the DNR hotline. States that mandate fixed identification of bear bait stations include a combination of the following: GPS coordinates, name, address, driver's license or DNR hunting license number, township section and range, and signage. Required identification results in more hunter accountability and allows wardens to swiftly identify violations. A shorter baiting season decreases the number of conflicts around these stations and encourages bears to eat a natural diet available in the woods.

Do you support the WCC working with the WDNR to amend bear baiting regulations through the introduction of rule changes to require that bait sites be identified and to limit baiting to no earlier than 30 days prior to bear hunting season?
